ANGOLA

4

Angola was a colony of Portugal from the 16th century until its independence in 1975. Serviced by the Portuguese post, the first issues for Angola were the Portuguese crown stamp common to all colonies, in 1870. The status of the colony changed under the Salazar regime, in 1951 to an Overseas Province of Portugal, and again in 1972 to an Autonomous State given authority over its own internal affairs. In fact this change of status did not mean much, and seems to have had no effect on the administration of the postal service. The nation achieved independence from Portugal on Nov. 11, 1975. UNITA were anti-communist forces that waged a years long insurgency and produced propagandistic stamps. I am not aware of a catalog for the UNITA issues. Today Angola cranks out abundant topicals as a client of the IGPC.

ANGOLA - CABINDA (PORTUGUESE CONGO)

1

Portuguese Congo, now the present-day province of Cabinda, was administered as a separate Portuguese colony following the Treaty of Simulambuco in 1885, and was supplied with its own stamps starting in 1894. Portuguese Congo was folded into Angola, as an exclave, in 1920.

Cabinda separatists were excluded from the independence negotiations between Angola and Portugal, resulting in a brief period of self-proclaimed independence in late 1975, but the territory was quickly occupied by pro-Angola forces. There has been a self-proclaimed government-in-exile for Cabinda, with no international recognition. Stamps in the name of this government-in-exile have occasionally appeared in collector's markets, although the connection, if any, to Cabinda is dubious.

Province of Cabinda stamps have been produced, supposedly by separatists, for the philatelic market. The first stamps were likely produced by Clive Feigenbaum, by overprinting Cabinda on excess stocks of counterfeit Angola stamps and souvenir sheets which he had previously produced illegally. Subsequent "regular issues" for Cabinda are from an unknown source.

The earliest postal services in Zambia date to the 1890s, when a few remote post offices were established and serviced by the British South Africa Company. In 1911 the territories of North-West Rhodesia and North-East Rhodesia were amalgamated into the new colony of Northern Rhodesia, which approximates the modern-day boundaries of Zambia. That territory was administered by the British South Africa Company, until its establishment as a British protectorate in 1924. The first stamps for Northern Rhodesia were issued in 1925. The colony folded into the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland in 1954 but that federation dissolved in 1963 as the three colonies each prepared for independence. During this interim period, just one definitive set was produced for Northern Rhodesia in 1963 as the colony prepared for independence. The independent nation of Zambia was formed in October 1964.

Rhodesia Railways Ltd. printed railway stamps for use throughout the colonial railway network for newspaper and parcel delivery. The network included stations in modern-day Zimbabwe (Southern Rhodesia), Zambia (Northern Rhodesia), Botswana (Bechuanaland) and for transfer to destinations in Mozambique. There were 21 stations in Northern Rhodesia, although no stamps are known for Kabew (KBE).

Zambia achieved its independence in 1964, and nationalized the rail system in 1967. Following the separation of the rail system, the Rhodesian Railways printed a new set of stamps for the Zambia Railways, which included the impression Z*R for Zambia Railways instead of R*R, and with 15 values denominated in the new Zambian currency. A later printed done in Zambia is on much cruder paper, and reportedly very few examples exist. According to Brakspear, the system may have been used on parcels, at least occasionally, as late as 1980.

Upon independence, the Rhodesian Railways issued parcel stamps for the benefit of the renamed Zambia Railways that were denominated in the new Zambian currency of Kwacha and Ngwee. These parcel stamps were used regularly up until 1969, and may have been used occasionally as late as 1980. I have not seen a definitive list of stations that used stamps post-independence.

Present day Malawi descends from the British Central Africa Protectorate, which existed from 1891-1908. The postal service was first established in 1891, using stamps of the British South Africa Company overprinted B.C.A. for British Central Africa. The first regular issues appeared in 1895. The colony changed its name to the Nyasaland Protectorate in 1907. Stamps were printed with the inscription Nyasaland Protectorate until 1930, with the 1934 issues the inscription was shortened to Nyasaland. In 1953, Nyasaland Protectorate merged into a federation with Northern and Southern Rhodesia, an uneasy union that led to civil unrest and increased calls for independence. With the dissolution of the Federation in 1963, one set of definitive stamps were issued for Nyasaland before the country gained full independence as Malawi in July 1964.

Germany established the colony of German South West Africa in 1884, administered from the port city of Lüderitz. Although there had previously been a small network of post offices attaching to South Africa, the Germans introduced their own regular postal service using German stamps starting in 1888. The first stamp issues for the colony were German stamps overprinted Deutsch-Sudwestafrika in 1897. The South African Army ran the Germans out in 1914-15 and extended South African postal services to the territory. Existing stocks of stamps were not modified during the war period. In 1922, the colony was renamed South-West Africa and mandated to South Africa, with South West Africa stamps being introduced in 1923. Namibia attained independence in 1990.

The first postal service for the territory was established in 1888 by the British South Africa Company, which administered the colonies that comprise modern day Zimbabwe and Zambia, using the stamps of British Bechuanaland. In 1890, the company printed a set of fancy B.S.A.C. stamps, although these did not see postal use until 1892. The region continued to use BSAC stamps until 1923 when the southern half of the territory formally became the colony of Southern Rhodesia, and lands north of the Zambezi River became Northern Rhodesia. BSAC stamps from 1909-1923 are also overprinted or inscribed Rhodesia. The colonies were joined together as the "Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland" from 1954-1963. But with the dissolution of this federation, a new set of stamps were printed in the name Southern Rhodesia. Rhodesia unilaterally declared independence as a white-nation in 1965 and issued stamps as Rhodesia up until the Zimbabwean revolution in 1978-79. Zimbabwe issued its first set of stamps in 1980.

Railway Parcel Stamps were used in Southern Rhodesia from 8/1/1951 to 8/31/1969. The railway system also extended into Northern Rhodesia, Bechauanaland (Botswana) and to the port city of Beira in Mozambique. The stamps had a simple design with a common background and a printed impression of the value and station code. Some station codes were pre-printed and others applied by rubber stamp. Although initially used systemwide, later stamps were used mostly at the smaller rural stations after the major stations employed automated cash registers that could print receipts. 57 stations are known to have used pre-printed parcel stamps, listed below.

Portugal issued the first postage stamps for its Mozambique colony in 1877, following the standard colonial designs for Portuguese definitives, first the Crown series, followed by King Luiz, King Carlos, and the Ceres designs. Starting in 1890, the authorities also issued stamps for the individual districts under their administration. Mozambique achieved independence in 1975, first overprinting existing stocks of colonial stamps.

In the 1890s, the various Portuguese colony omnibus stamps were overprinted for use in each of the individual districts under administration, including Zambezia, Inhambane, Lourenço Marques (now Maputo) and Mozambique. In 1913, two new postal districts of Quelimane and Tete were carved out of Zambezia. Two charter companies, Mozambique Company and Nyassa Company were also permitted to issue and use stamps within their large territories.

Kionga is a small territory on the northern coastline of Mozambique that Portugal retook from German East Africa in 1916. Upon its capture, stamps of Lourenço Marques were overprinted with various denominations. The Treaty of Versailles awarded Kionga to Portugal which today is the northernmost integral part of Mozambique.

The four colonies of South Africa were united under British rule into the Union of South Africa in 1910. The first stamps for the new colony portray George V and bear the four coats of arms for Cape Colony, Natal, Orange River Colony and Transvaal. Since that time, the majority of postal issues have been released in pairs, alternating between English and Afrikaans on the same printed sheet. The country gained independence in 1931, becoming a whites-only republic in 1961 and moving to a full democracy in 1994.

Cape of Good Hope was the first South African colony to issue stamps, on 9/1/1853. The first stamps are known as the Triangulars. The colony continued to produce regular stamp emissions until 1910, with existing stocks of CGH stamps remaining postally valid for use as late as 1937.

3

Orange Free State was a Boer republic settled in the 1830s and granted independence with the withdraw of the British administration in 1854. The OFS issued its first postage stamps on 1/1/1868. The Second Boer War (1899-1900) started with Orange Free State and Transvaal troops entering the British Cape Colony and Natal, the war ended with the British occupation of Bloemfontein on 3/13/1900. OFS stamps were declared invalid, and existing postage and revenue stamps were locally overprinted with V.R.I. (Victoria Regina Imperatrix) in 1900. Britain annexed the territory in May 1900 and renamed the territory Orange River Colony, although the ware continued until the Treaty of Vereeniging on 5/31/1902. Following British direct rule, the state attained self-government in 1907 and joined the new Union of South Africa in 1910.

The RDM stamps were non-denominated stamps used by the Rijdende Dienst Macht (Mounted Police Force) on mail from 1896-1899. Commando Brief stamps were used by Boer troops from field stations during the Second Boer War.

SOUTH AFRICA - TRANSVAAL

Transvaal postal history is complicated. The first stamps for the South African Republic (ZAR) were issued in 1870. ZAR was occupied and annexed by Britain in 1877, leading to the first Anglo-Boer War and a decisive Boer victory in 1880. The Second Republic (Boer) issued stamps again from 1882-1900 when it was taken by Britain and renamed Transvaal Colony in 1901. The Pietersburg issues were locally produced in 1901 for areas remaining under Boer control.

The Mount Currie Express is one of the rarest local stamps in classic-era philately. In 1874 a small number of stamps were printed for J.D. Ballance & Goodliffe, a general store in Kokstad that offered to deliver and receive letters and packages for the public from Natal. At the time there was no postal service in Griqualand East, and he received permission from the Griqua governmentl for the penny post service. Fewer than 50 of these stamps are believed to exist - it is one of the proudest holdings in my collection.

Many of the local posts emerged during the Second Boer War (1898-1900) during times of siege or other postal disruption. Locally overprinted stamps are treated as regular issues in Scott, including Lydenburg (214-221), Rustenburg (223-231), Schweizer Renecke "beseiged" stamps (232-236) and Wolmaransstad (237-245). The Pietersvurg stamps of 1901 are general issues local produced and used in areas still under Boer control.

Parcel stamps for the South Africa Railways (SAS/SAR) bore a preprinted three letter code for the stations. Like all South African stamps, stamp inscriptions alternated between the two official languages on every printed sheet: S.A.R. "South African Railways" in English, and S.A.S. "Spoorweë van Suid-Afrika" in Afrikaans. There are 967 catalogued stations, I only include here the stamps in my possession.

South Africa went through currency decimalization in 1961. My collection is a combination of pre-decimalization and post-decimalization stamps.

MADAGASCAR

The first stamps for Madagascar were issued independently by French and British interests. After the French invasion of the island in 1883 and a treaty signed in 1886, the French established postal services using the general issues for the French Colonies. In 1889 three values were surcharged for local use, in addition to non-surcharged stamps, being thus recognized as the first stamps for Madagascar. A stamp with a simple design was issued in 1891. In 1895, the French took Tananarive and in 1896 annexed Madagascar. The Malagasy Republic achieved independence in 1958 and established its own postal service at that time. It became the Malagasy Democratic Republic in 1975 and reverted to Madagascar in 1993. Today the country is a prolific issuer of postage stamps, and numerous unauthorized and fraudulent issues abound.

In 1884 the British Consul in Tananarive established a runner service to deliver mail to the French post office in Tamatave. Large format stamps were privately printed for pre-paid postage.

Diego-Suarez (Antsiranana) is a port city on the north of the island administered as a French Colony from 1885 until the French annexation of Madagascar in 1896. Majunga (Mahajanga) is a port city where stamps of the French Colonies were provisionally surcharged in 1895. These are treated as regular issues (22a-27) in Scott.

During the French war of occupation, the Norwegian Missionary Society set up a private post in Tananarive and issued stamps in the local currency and later in English currency values. Stamps were printed with the mission's own letter press. The mission discontinued the service when the French established the colonial post in 1896.

Also in 1895, the British privately organized an "inland mail" service using runners, with attractive stamp designs, which lasted from January to September 1895.

The first post office was established in Victoria in 1861, using stamps of Mauritius until 1890. The first Seychelles stamps were delivered in 1890, and the post office became independent of the Mauritius postal system in 1892. The nation achieved its independence in 1976.

A series of stamps for the outer islands, variously inscribed Zil Eloigne Sesel, Zil Elwagne Sesel and Zil Elwannyen Sesel, were produced from 1980-1992. The islands, most notably Aldabra, had been handed over from the British Indian Ocean Territory to the newly-independent Seychelles and were served by a traveling post office (boat).

The Comoros Archipelago consist primarily of four populous islands, three of which today form the nation of Comoros, and one of which, Mayotte, is now part of France. In the early colonial period, France issued separate stamps for each of the four main islands. In 1912, the islands were administratively attached to the colony of Madagascar and independent stamp production ceased. Post-war, the islands became an overseas territory of France with a new set of stamps printed Archipel des Comores and valued in CFA Francs, released in 1950. In 1975, Anjouan, Grand Comoro and Moheli voted for independence, and Mayotte elected to remain a French territory. Existing stocks of stamps were overprinted with "Etat Comore" marking the beginning of the independent postal system. The new nation then signed a deal with a prolific issuer of topical stamps which flooded the markets. This arrangement ended after the Islamic revolution, with stamp production returning to more normal levels.

Perhaps the greatest first issue of all time were the so-called Post Office issues, 500 locally produced stamps bearing the image of Queen Victoria released in Mauritius in 1847. These were the first stamps in the British Empire outside of Great Britain, and are among the rarest stamps in all of philately. Mauritius gained independence in 1968.

The first stamps for Reunion were printed in 1852. Subsequently stamps of the French Colonies were overprinted for use on the island until the omnibus Navigation and Commerce issues of 1892 were released. In 1942, Free France troops made an amphibious landing and took the island from the Vichy-allied government. The Vichy issues however occurred later in the war and were never placed into use. Reunion became an overseas department of France in 1946, and fully integrated into France, with full rights of citizenship, in 1974.
